In angry tones, French High Commissioner Christian Fouchet broadened crackdown measures, announced the capture of two secret army commando units, and said up to 1,500 plainclothesmen recruited from Moslem rebel army ranks and armed with shoot-to-kill orders soon will be roaming Algiers.

One captured eight-man commando band, including the chief of secret army commandos in central Algiers, admitted more than 200 attacks and the boobytrapping of an automobile, Fouchet said. The gang also was responsible for machine-gunning and bombing two groups of police and a villa housing "barbouzes" (the bearded ones), a special plainclothes force, he said. One of Friday's attacks was on the same downtown street where police hauled in every male over 18 years of age for questioning Thursday. Two Moslems in a truck were wounded by machine gun bullets.

The shooting set off a mob action of 200 Moslems who swooped out of their Casbah quarter, beat up one European badly and sent others fleeing in terror.

In another incident a police ambulance carrying two secret army prisoners was fired upon. The prisoners were liberated and a policeman wounded.

The secret army, which is fighting to prevent Algerian independence, is gambling that it can undermine Gen. Charles de Gaulle's cease-fire with Algerian national-ists by provokingthe Moslems into bloody retaliation.

Fouchet, from his barricaded headquarters at Rocher Noir outside Algiers, announced a string of arrests and deportations and orders to beef up police forces following the slaying Thursday of 55 persons, nearly all of them

Can They Be Right?

Nearly every trite saying has at least some truth in it, but, as another adage goes, there are exceptions to every rule. Right now we can think of an exception to the axiom that says, "He who makes no mistakes does nothing but he who makes too many loses his job." The exception is found in regard to members of the United States supreme court. Many of them have made more mistakes than any one should be allowed to make and yet they don't lose their

There is also the prevailing opinion that no one can be right all the time. Conversely, we might say that no one can be absolutely wrong all the time, although it might often appear that they can

It has often seemed that Chief Justice Earl Warren has ruled the wrong way on every issue a n d Justices William O. Douglas and Hugo Black have not been far behind him in wrong-way decisions.

Yet now we find these three judges agreeing on a question that seems to put them into conformity with the intention of the drafters of the United States constitution and the bill of rights.

These three justices said the time has come to require that defense counsel be provided for anyone put on trial in a state court on a criminal-offense charge. We would go farther and say that the same should apply in federal court.

The review requiring defense counsel, if ever backed by a majority of the supreme court, would overturn a ruling of 20 years ago that lets state judges use their discretion as to whether defense counsel should be provided.

In Louisiana and many other states the law requires that defense counsel be provided in felony cases if the defendant is unable to provide his own attorney. It is presumed that the three justices meant that counsel must be provided in felony cases either at the expense of the defendant or of the state if the defendant was financially unable to pay an attorney, but the justices may have meant for the rule to apply even in misdemeanor cases. This would seem logical, inasmuch as no one should go undefended when facing a charge, provided he wishes to offer a defense. In minor cases tried before a judge, rather than a jury, defendants often prefer to waive their right to an attorney and to depend on their own statement of the case, and this would seem legitimate enough.

The call for a change was made by Justice Black, with support from Chief Justice Warren and Justice Douglas, in connection with a 7-0 court decision that overturned the incest conviction of Willard Carnley in Florida. Carnley's appeal described him as an illiterate who was put on trial without being given the assistance of an attorney. He was sentenced to a term of from six month to 20 years. It was stated that if Carnley had had an attorney he might have invoked a state law which permits hospital commitment for persons convicted of the kind of crime charged to Carnley.

Justice Douglas, in an opinion urging the view that everyone on trial ought to be provided with defense counsel, said: "The jury system-pride of the English-speaking world—becomes a trap for the layman because he is utterly without ability to make it serve the ends of justice."

The constitution and bill of rights provide that anyone accused of a crime has the right to a trial by a jury of his peers. Some states adhere rigidly to this, making a jury optional with the defendant in minor cases. Some states and the federal government allow trials in misdemeanor cases by judges only, not giving the defendant an option.

Some day the supreme court may get around to holding that counsel must be provided in all felony cases and in misdemeanor cases when desired and that juries must be provided, if requested, in all trials, both felony and misdemean-This would seem to be in conformity with the constitution and bill of rights of the United States.

Patient And Quacks

"The time has come to release the patient from the quacks."

That statement was made by Dr. Arthur A. Smith, vice-president and economist of the First National Bank of Dallas. Addressing the American Cotton Shippers Association in Dallas, Dr. Smith charged that government subsidies and controls have created more problems than they have solved.

He pointed out that during the period of controls on cotton the United States share of the world market has decreased from more than 58 per cent of the total to as low as 30 per cent in 1960.

Dr. Smith observed, however, that since subsidization seems the easy way out, our political leaders, when confronted with the problem, just subsidize it and hope for the best.

He called for a return to a single price system, under which domestic and foreign mills could buy cotton at the same prices and both domestic and foreign mills could compete with the synthetic fibers for the textile markets.

He deplored the practice of purchasing crops of cotton in advance, saying it encourages the lowering of quality and tends to undo the efforts toward quality that have been sought so many years.

It is difficult to find a good word for the administration's farm control program but there are two great dangers in them.

One is that lower quality and higher prices will drive our farm products from the world markets. A new move toward lowering quality is that in which it is sought to limit potato production in the good potato states, such as Iowa, where the world's most famed potatoes are grown.

Another is that the farm control program is no longer intended merely to help the farmers but is a part of the movement to socialize American industry.

The Administration apparently hoped that making civil defense part of the Department of Defense program would eliminate the skepticism with which Thomas regarded civil defense budget proposals in past years. Thomas himself has said his

The request was sent to Congress after the defense appropriations bill had passed the House and was inserted into the Senate version as an amendment. It was then approved by a Senate - House conference committee which did not include representatives of the Thomas group.

The Administration may have hoped that putting civil defense into the defense budget would transfer jurisdiction over its appropriation from the Thomas Independent Offices Subcommittee to the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee headed by Rep. George House Appropriations Chairman

Clarence Cannon (D., Mo.) does not work that way, however. When this year's budget request was split up and parceled out to the various subcommittees, civil defense went right back to the Thomas group

Behind the political pulling and hauling on Captiol Hill remains the fact there is a deep schism among the nation's scientific and moral leaders over the advisability of an extensive shelter program.

Thomas revealed earlier that non-governmental witnesses who asked to appear before his subcommittee on the shelter appropriation were unanimous in their opposition to the proposal.

A substantial segment of the scientific community apparently is convinced fall - out shelters will not provide the protection shelter backers say they will.

the industry as a whole made Ever since the steel crisis, it has been asked loudly and frejust a little over 2 per cent in quently in Washington whether profits last year. The facts in the dispute, which I presume the emergency board examined, are these:

Non-operating workers make up 63 per cent of the railroad labor force. If these 451,000 nonoperating workers were given the 25 cents an hour they insist is their due, it would cost the railroads some $265 million a year in extra wages. The 10.2 cents recommended by the emergency board would represent well over $100 million in added pay. The railroads note that the entire net income of all the Class I roads in 1961 was only $382 million. This is a somewhat doctored statistic, for it does not include income of the entire industry. But it shows that the roads are hardly rolling in profits.

The statistical numbers game played by the emergency board —a statement that railroad wage increases had lagged behind those of general manufacturing in the past two years - is far more significant. I am certain these figures are accurate. But they give the impression that this has been a chronic condition. To be fair about it, there should be some mention in dollar terms and some long-range comparisons. For example, in 1961, the average straight hourly wage for the non-operating workers was $2.47 general manufacturing where was paying $2.25. The average weekly earnings of these same railroad workers were $104.04 a week, against $92.34 in general manufacturing. And to return to percentages, the non-operating workers have received pay increases of $49.78 since 1947 to manufacturing employment's $43.17. These figures paint a different picture than that of the President's emergency board. Whether or not Mr. Kennedy will use White House muscle to enforce the board's recommendations is moot. But the problem goes far beyond the size of the wage boost or any collective bargaining hassles. The railroads must modernize if they are to survive. This costs a tremendous amount of money which must come out of profits. If those profits are whittled away, the railroads will become even more obsolescent. The inevitable step, when they can no longer make operating ends meet, will be the demand that they be nationalrespect on the Hill for the manner in which he revitalized the civil defense program after it was transferred to the Pentagon from the moribund Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization last year. But so far as fall-out shelters go, his seems to be a lone Administration voice at present. The Administration apparently hoped that making civil defense a part of the Department of Defense program would eliminate the skepticism with which Thomas regarded civil defense budget proposals in past years. Thomas himself has said his

The Thomas subcommittee, however, did not get to take a look at the $208 million item.

The request was sent to Congress after the defense appropriations bill had passed the House and was inserted into the Senate version as an amendment. It was then approved by a Senate - House conference committee which did not include representatives of the Thomas group.

The Administration may have hoped that putting civil defense into the defense budget would transfer jurisdiction over its appropriation from the Thomas Independent Offices Subcommittee to the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee headed by Rep. George Mahon (D., Texas)

House Appropriations Chairman Clarence Cannon (D., Mo.) does not work that way, however. When this year's budget request was split up and parceled out to the various subcommittees, civil defense went right back to the Thomas group, reminded in the kind of language anyone can understand that anything said over the air has to be completely above board. This was brought home forcefully last week when a Federal Communications Commissioner issued a 53 - page decision recommending that a station in Kingstree, S. C., be stripped of its broadcast license. In general, the station owner was criticized for not paying attention to what his disc jockey "Uncle Charlie' was putting out on the air. A transcript of testimony, in which tape recording of "Uncle Charlie's" show were introduced revealed jokes, stories and coments which could not make even the raciest magazine. A mild sample, "Careful drivers can have accidents. Careful boy friends can have accidents, too." Or, seen something last night that I wanted. I wasn't too bashful to go get it. I was just too smart. ### Kennedy Hard Put To Justify Increase For Union Workers

Ever since the steel crisis, it has been asked loudly and frequently in Washington whether President Kennedy would respond with the same one-two punch when labor made new wage demands. The question was, course, rhetorical and needling, for no one really expected Mr. Kennedy to light out after the AFL-CIO as he had after U. S. Steel's Roger Blough. But the test has nevertheless come-and Mr. Kennedy must find reasons for characterizing higher steel prices as "inflationary" but not making similar findings in regard to wages. The first test is but a cloud the horizon. United Auto Workers President Walter Reuther, whose friends at the White House are many, has demanded that wages of UAW members on space projects be raised. This makes an embarrassing parallel. One of Mr. Kennedy's arguments against the steel price rise was that it would increase the cost of defense. So will Mr. Reuther's demand.

The second test is right at hand and Mr. Kennedy has already expressed a singleness of interest with the Presidential emergency board, appointed by him to study the merits of the labor and the railroad positions in a current dispute involving the non-operating workers. The emergency board approved a pay boost of 10.2 cents an hour-more moderate than the union hold-out for 25 cents an hour-and decided that this would be "non-inflationary." To justify its findings, the emergency board dealt in percentages which, on the face of it, indicated that the non-operating railroad workers have not been doing as well as those in general manufacturing.

Debates based on statistics are often futile. It depends on where you begin and what you leave But one fact seems to be incontrovertible: If the hardpressed railroads are to survive, they will have to meet the cost of the 10.2 cents an hour by upping their rates. And this, in any man's language, will have an inflationary effect - right down the line. The railroads have long been pinned down in collective bargaining by a host of special government regulations. As a result, they must operate on an uneconomic basis, which is why they rank 72nd among the 73 major industrial groups in their profit ratio. Some of the big roads are running at a loss, but the industry as a whole made just a little over 2 per cent in profits last year. The facts in the dispute, which presume the emergency board examined, are these:

Non-operating workers make up 63 per cent of the railroad labor force. If these 451,000 nonoperating workers were given the 25 cents an hour they insist is their due, it would cost the railroads some $265 million a year in extra wages. The 10.2 cents recommended by the emergency board would represent well over $100 million in added pay. The railroads note that the entire net income of all the Class I roads in 1961 was only $382 million. This is a somewhat doctored statistic, for it does not include the income of the entire industry. But it shows that the roads are hardly rolling in profits. The statistical numbers game played by the emergency board -a statement that railroad wage increases had lagged behind those of general manufacturing in the past two years — is far more significant. I am certain these figures are accurate. But they give the impression that this has been a chronic condition. To be fair about it, there should be some mention in dollar terms and some long-range comparisons.

For example, in 1961, the average straight hourly wage for the non-operating workers was $2.47 where general manufacturing was paying $2.25. The average weekly earnings of these same railroad workers were $104.04 a week, against $92.34 in general manufacturing. And to return to percentages, the non-operating workers have received pay increases of $49.78 since 1947 to manufacturing employment's $43.17. These figures paint a slightly different picture than that of the President's emergency board.

Whether or not Mr. Kennedy will use White House muscle to enforce the board's recommendations is moot. But the problem goes far beyond the size of the wage boost or any collective bargaining hassles. The railroads must modernize if they are to survive. This costs a tremendous amount of money which must come out of profits. If those profits are whittled away, the railroads will become even more obsolescent. The inevitable step when they can no longer make operating ends meet, will be the demand that they be national Maybe the deficit will be in the $5 billion range, as both the respected Senate-House Internal Revenue Taxation Committee and Senator Harry Byrd, the Virginia Democrat who heads the powerful Senate Finance Committee, recently estimated. Perhaps it will be in the $7 billion range, as a just-completed analysis by the House Republican Policy Committee forecasts. Or the red ink could come to a whopping $10 billion -a figure being whispered in as well as out of Washington.

Whatever the precise deficit figure when the books are closed on the 1963 fiscal year, the pivotal point is that the budget is fast sinking into the red-and Presi dent Kennedy's January predic tion of a hairline surplus of a half-billion dollars already is in the ashcan

Individual incomes are way up too - but not up enough to offset the shortfall in corporation earnings. with apprehension Moreover. growing that unless our economy is given an additional push, we may be facing another recession during the 1963 fiscal year, pressure is building for new spending programs.

MULTIPLY SEVEN BY ONE MILLION and you'll get some idea of the amount of money retailers and other local advertisers invest in daily newspaper advertising EVERY DAY!

These advertisers know that the more than $7 million they invest daily in newspapers* is a wise investment that regularly pays off in buying action at the cash register. People want and look for advertising messages in the daily newspaper, and no other medium equals daily newspapers' ability to move merchandise out of shops and showrooms into homes and onto shelves.
